Chapter 1 by Bernardo

There was once a kid named Jack who loved adventures.

Chapter 2 by Gounaitory

Once Jack decided to stole neighbor's bike and drive it to the forest. He came to this mind when his father got him an old book of adventures. It was said in this book that magic forest located near his town and so Jack decided to take a bike and drive it to the forest. However, he didn't wanted to go there alone

Chapter 3 by intellikat

Strangely enough, however, he decided to make all decisions in this adventure THE OPPOSITE of what his gut instinct told him.

"It's an opposite adventure," he thought to himself, and rode off on his bicycle alone, with no torch, food, water, or means of communication.

Chapter 4 by Shasta

He traveled up the mountain, because he had a good feeling about going by the river, and strained against the slope.

His breathing came out hard, in puffs of misty-aired smoke, and his stomach rumbled.

He wished he had something to eat or had eaten something at lunch.

But his gut had told him to eat, and he had eaten something at lunch. It had been bewitched by a hag years ago.

The food probably contained poisons, or curses, something that should be avoided. The river probably had pesticide in it, and the shrubbery was filled with brambles that would pop his tires.

He couldn't trust his gut.

Not anymore.

That was why when he came to a fork in the road, he felt like he should go to the left.

So, he went to the right.

And by the sounds coming down the left lane, he was glad he picked the other lane.
